Western observers here interpreted Marshal Ogarkov's remarks as a sign of growing Soviet frustra-tion over their inability to establish a dialogue with the United States. This was also reflected in a com-

Britain Sets Up 3 Riot Inquiries After More Trouble in Brixton

By Steven Rattner New York Times Service

LONDON - The British government Thursday announced three official inquiries stemming from the rash of urban riots in the country. Earlier there was new trouble in Brixton.

The actions, announced during a tumultuous debate in the House of Commons, fell far short of opposition party demands for new programs aimed at inner-city problems as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher signaled again a determination to avoid changing her economic program.

But as Brixton seethed over a police raid on Wednesday, Lord Scarman, who is leading an official investigation into disturbances there in April, questioned police methods that produced renewed violence, injuries to 10 policemeo and five arrests.

The damage I saw inside the houses I visited was very substantial," the eminent jurist said Thursday after touring the buildings searched. "Indeed, I'm sure that some of the property I saw destroyed was the property of some innocent persons

The often-emotional debate in the Commons on Thursday made clear that the current political test is whether the Labor Party, which has railed for months against the Thatcher program and the 2.7 million unemployed Britons, will succeed in using the nois as a wedge to draw support for its jobs-orient-ed approach to economic policy.

Thatcher Down in Polls

For their part, the Conservatives have been energetically trying to shift the debate away from economic policies and toward law and order. In a further indication of Mrs. Thatcher's continuing refusal to switch economic gears, the Cabinet economic committee, which she chairs, late Wednesday night postponed pending further investi-gation a decision on a $1.9-billion.

The plan she set aside, which had been promoted by James Prithe employment secretary, would have guaranteed every youth leaving school a job, further education or industrial training, similar to the West German approach. At present the young peo-ple the British call "school leavers" have no such guarantees and face a lengthy delay before receiving unemployment compensation.

As unemployment has mounted to 11 percent, Mrs. Thatcher has suffered in the public opinion polls. Even a faction within her party, known as "wets", has sought a more moderate economic

But the Labor Party, which has steadily endorsed more radical positions, has had difficulty in convincing the British public that its alternative of more government spending, more nationalization and lower interest rates would have greater chance of success.

In the aftermath of polls showing an overwhelming desire for a tough stance against lawlessness, Mr. Whitelaw's 35-minute speech which struck a firm hut balanced tone and did not discuss economic policy, was met with approving cheers from Labor and Conservative members.

No Justification

"No reason, no explanation for the recent troubles justifies what has occurred," said Mr. Whitelaw, to approving cheers. He also noted that "we must be prepared to ac-knowledge some measure of failure in our society, particularly as concerns young people."

But after praising Mr. Whitelaw's efforts, Roy Hattersley, the Labor Party's shadow home secretary, said that "while the causes of the disturbances remain - poverty, unemployment and deprivation the chances of violence breaking out again will remain and perhaps

At the same time, a campaign appeared under way to undermine the standing of Stanislaw Kania, who succeeded Mr. Gierek as party leader, and the congress seemed to be turning into a behind-thescenes struggle between liberals and conservatives.

In a dramatic struggle that was only partially hidden from view. Mr. Kania sought to beat back a challenge to his re-election as a first secretary. The challenge was rooted in the conservative faction of the party, which objects to his moderate policies in controlling the press, tolerating political dissidents and granting concessions to the Solidarity trade union.

Outcome Unpredictable

Knowledgeable party sources were still predicting that Mr. Kania would win when all 1.955 delegates vote in still another secret ballot, probably Friday. But they acknowledged that the outcome was not entirely predictable.

Major Flood Is Reported By Chinese

By James P. Sterba New York Times Service PEKING - A flood disaster of major proportions was under way in the Yangtze River Valley Thursday night, with water from six days of torrential rains surging from Sichuan province through heavily populated regions toward Shanghai at crest levels higher than have been recorded since the turn of the century. Frantic evacuation efforts were reported in Hubei and Anhin provinces as soldiers and government workers prepared to burst dikes to divert floodwaters into rural farming areas. This was an effort to avert disastrous flooding in Wuhan, Naming and other river-

The Chinese news agency reported late Thursday that crests at the confinence of the Yangtze and Jailing rivers in Chongqing swept through at noon at their highest levels since 1905.

Casualties Unknown

Need for New Bases

The airborne plan would be less costly in the next few years. Many specialists say, however, that it would be ultimately more expensive than any of the alternatives.

Initial estimates are that it would cost $15 billion just for new bases and other facilities, not counting the cost of the planes or the missiles. New bases would be needed, specialists said, because many existing bomber bases are near the coast, and the idea would be to keep the new planes as far away as possible from missile-carrying submarines.

The future Big Bird program envisions keeping many planes in the air at all times, adding further to the operating costs of the system.

A political advantage of the airborne plan is that it would avoid environmental controversy that is certain to continue surrounding any proposal for a land-based MX system. On the other hand, the building of many new bases could lead to similar political opposition

French Policy Aims To Counter Qadhafi

By Joseph Fitchett
International Herald Tribune
PARIS — French officials, explaining the Socialist government's announcement of resumed arms deliveries to Libya, say the deci-sion is the initial public step in a new strategy for limiting Col. Moamer Qadhafi's attempts to in-timidate French-supported Afri-

At an External Relations Ministry briefing Wednesday, a spokes-man said France would not sign new arms deals with Libya as long as Libyan troops remained in Chad, but would honor existing veapons and oil-exploration contracts embargoed by the previous French government.

The weapons deal includes 32 Mirage F-1 fighter planes, seven Combattante II missile boats of the sort previously sold to Israel, and large quantities of ammuni-tion and spare parts for French arms already purchased by Libya. Training will continue to be provided by hundreds of French experts under contract to Dassault-Breguet, the aircraft manufacturer scheduled for nationalization.

Some Paris newspapers de-scribed the Socialist attitude as a revival of pragmatic French efforts to sell arms to gain access to oil, but French officials defended the policy as a hid to set clear limits to French cooperation with Libya and develop a realistic plan for containing Libyan influence in Af-

New Policy

According to officials who helped to formulate it, the new French policy - which has implications for the recently elected Socialist government's overall approach to Africa — involves sever-al distinct but related elements:

· A public French posture of normal commercial dealings and reduced political contacts with Tripoli — a position similar to that adopted by the Reagan administration.

· Strong signals - both to Libya and to neighboring African states fearful of Col. Qadhafi — that France will maintain its military presence in friendly African states and respond to any threatened state's request for assistance.

• An end to covert French assistance to dissident factions in Chad, and a receptive French attitude in aid requests from President Goukouni Oueddei in hopes that Mr. Goukouni might gain enough confidence to dispense with Li-hyan support. These references to an end to French help for Hissène Hahré, Chad's former defense minister, were the first official confirmation of Western assistance to the Sudan-based rebel.

 A French diplomatic cam-paign to convince African leaders to put pressure on Col. Qadhafi to start withdrawing his 5,000-man contingent from Chad. The French officials said that the new govern-ment hoped its criticism of South Africa would help it to gain an Afican audience for its views about

6 Killed in Paris Fire The Associated Press

nal Relations Ministry and in the Ministry of Cooperation, which handles African affairs, said Thursday that France was unable to react effectively at the time because it could not rally a solid African front. They said key African leaders, influenced by Libyan propaganda, had believed that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was pursuing an equivocal policy toward Col. Qadhafi, denouncing him in public while quietly pursuing business as contract with France's state-owned Elf-Aquitaine.

This impression of French ambiguity, the officials said, persisted even after Mr. Giscard d'Estaing embargoed arms deliveries to Libya and the oil-exploration con-

Efforts by the previous French government to incite resistance in Chad to the Libyan presence apparently were equally futile in in-fluencing opinion among African leaders, who recently voted for Tripoli as the site of the next summit meeting of the Organization for African Unity. ### 14 Zia Opponents Seized in Raid on Meeting United Press International

LAHORE, Pakistan — Police arrested 14 opponents of President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq in a raid on an illegal political meeting, authorities said Thursday.

They said the detainees were members of the central committee of the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, which has called for Gen. Zia's overthrow. The group was formed in February in defiance of a martial-law ban on political activities and includes supporters of the Pakistan People's Party of the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

The arrests were made Wednesday night at the Lahore home of Sheikh Mohammed Rashid, an agriculture minister mider Mr. Bhutto, but Sheikh Rashid escaped. PEKING - A government-controlled magazine has disclosed that the authors of the Communist Party's assessment of its 32 years of ruling China were ordered to uphold Mao's thought regardless of how much the late chairman's actions were criticized. .

New York Times Service
GENEVA — The Palestine Liberation Organization established official contact with the Swiss gov-

The PLO first asked the Swiss in draft," the agency reported. The magazine reported none of the backroom battles that other Chinese sources said took place other than to say that various and diverse opinions were sought.

The article, said to have been written by the editorial board of the magazine, said. The reason why a review of the years be-fore the founding of the People's Republic is included in the resolution is to convince people that Mao Tse-ting's contributions are primary and his faults secondary."

The clear implication is that the opposite conclusion would have resulted if Mao's record since 1949 was assessed alone.
Calling the drafting procedure a "thoroughly democratic way of working," the article said that after seven months of drafting by top leaders, last October the party convened a 20-day meeting of 4,000 senior party officials from around the country to discuss and revise the first draft. It did not discuss what changes were made.

Then, it reported, about 50 Polithuro, secretariat and other senior. party officials pondered suggested revisions before calling an en-larged Polithuro session in May to approve more changes. That ses-sion lasted 12 days.

Then, from June 22 to 25, comments from nonparty organiza-tions were solicited and, in preparatory meetings for the parry's sixth plenum, another 1,000 leading members of the party, government and army were asked to give opinions, the article said:

It reported that Marshal Ye Jianying first broached the idea of such an assessment in his speech in 1979 celebrating the 30th anniversary of China's founding under Communist rule. Marshal Ye, ironically, is opposed to many of the "de-Maoization" policies of Deputit Chairman Dens Visconia. Deputy Chairman Deng Xiaoping, whose lieutenants used the assess-ment to debunk Maoism and justify their rule.

The article confirms that major responsibility for drafting the as-sessment was in the hands of Hu-Yaobang, then the party's secretary-general and now the party chairman. It does not say how much of a role was held by the for-mer chairman. Hua Guoteng, ban it implies that he was on the defen sive throughout.

SAVE ON SURCHARGES

Many hotels outside the U.S. charge exorbitant surcharge fees on international calls. And sometimes the fees are greater than the cost of the call itself. But if your hotel has TELEPLAN, the way to keep hotel surcharges reasonable, go ahead and call. No Teleplan? Read on!

There are other ways to save money.

SAYE WITH A SHORTLE In most countries there's no threeminute minimum on self-dialed calls.

So if your hotel offers International Dialing from your room, place a short call home and have them call you back. The surcharge on short calls is low. And you pay for the callback from the States with dollars, not local currency, when you get your next home or office phone bill.

SAVE THESE OTHER WAYS Telephone Company credit card and collect calls may be placed in many countries. And where they are, the hotel surcharges on such calls are usually low. Or, you can avoid surcharges altogether by calling from the post office or from other telephone centers.

SAVE NIGHTS & WEEKENDS Always check to see whether the country you're in has lower rates at night and on weekends: Usually the savings are considerable.

Have you digested that? O.K. Now pass the mustard!

White House Objects To Drafts of 4 House Appropriation Bills

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, already victorious on budget targets and program cuts, is cracking down on congres-sional appropriations that are not shaped the way it wants.

Contending that the House Appropriations Committee is risking spending overruns by the way it is propriations Committee is risking spending overruns by the way it is allocating money for next year. Whitten, a Democrat from Mississippi, to complain about money bills for the Interior, Housing and Urban Development, Agriculture and Treasury denartments. wy departments.
House consideration of the $11.2-billion Interior bill was held up temporarily this week when Republican Rep. William E. Dannemeyer of California, acting on the administration's behalf, complained that it added $600 million pament that it added 5000 million to spending levels recommended by Mr. Reagan for some programs and left no room for supplemental appropriations. This complaint caught members of both parties off guard.

Democrats think the administration was reaching. There was enough consternation on the Republican side to prompt Mr. Stockman to meet Wednesday with Republican members of the appropriations panel to explain his case. Sources within the administration consider the alleged defects serious enough to warrant a possi-ble presidential veto.

All but the Interior bill fall within congressional budget targets. But the administration contends that spending is skewed in such a way as to lead to cost overruns for the future, as well as significant policy departures from Mr. Reagan's budget. Democrats con-tend that the administration is complaining about how money is spent even in cases when its own budget targets are met.

Mustrative Interior Bill

The Interior bill is illustrative of the dispute. The committee re-duced proposed funding for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, reflecting lower oil prices. The administration objects that the com-mittee then used the money to belp restore funds for programs that Mr. Reagan targeted for cuts, con-tending that the money should simply not be spent.

According to an Office of Management and Budget document, the additions include $106 million for park acquisition, $78 million for energy conservation, $42 million for Indian programs, $129 million for arts and humanities en-dowments and $20 million for the Youth Conservation Corps.

The Interior bill exceeds budget targets only because the oil reserve is counted. If it is simply not counted for budget purposes, as both the House and Senate have voted to do, the money bill would be well within the general budget target - although it conflicts in details with Mr. Reagan's budget, As for the Housing and Urban Development bill, the administration complains that the committee has used $1.1 billion in paper savmgs from housing bonds to spread over a variety of programs includ-ing the National Consumer Cooperative Bank, which Mr. Reagan wants to kill.

Appeal by Reagan

The Senate Finance Committee endorsed Sen. Armstrong's indexing amendment last month and agreed to try attaching it to the tax bill on the floor. That issue probably will be the first indicate. bly will be the first indication whether the Senate will heed Mr. Reagan's appeal not to burden his tax cut package with expensive special-interest amendments.

Sen. Russell Long of Louisiana, senior Democrat on the Finance Committee, adamanly opposes indexing, arguing that it would build inflation into the tax system and make its offer. make its effect on taxes invisible. But Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole, a Kansas Republican, said that indexing tax rates to the inflation rate would "preserve the positive effects of the proposed rate reductions by ensuring that toflation will not continue to push people into higher brackets."

Majority Leader Howard Baker

of Tennessee wants the Senate to take a final vote on the tax bill by this weekend. Democratic leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia said he doubts that timetable will be met, but he conceded that Mr. Reagan would win in the Senate.

Aid-Dispersal Plans Seen as Summit Issue

WASHINGTON -- The issue of how best to channel billions of dollars in aid from the industrial democracies to poor nations has emerged as a likely point of contention at the Ottawa summit conference next week, according to Reagan administration offi-

The officials said Wednesday that President Reagan's advisers are dissausfied with the wording of a draft of the communique to be issued at the end of the summit, and that the president will press for language changes in the section relating to aid to developing countries in the Third World.

At issue is what a Reagan aide described as the "largely symbolic" question of a proposed set of "global negotiations" over how to transfer billions of dollars in aid. The European nations and Canada favor such negotiations, but the Reagan administration

At his meeting with Mr. Reagan last Friday, Prime Minister

Volcker asserts that European leaders understand U.S. interest-rate policy. Page 11.

Pierre Elhott Trudean of Canada — the host of the summit conference — was reported to have pushed hard for Mr. Reagan's endorsement of global negotiations. An administration aide said Mr. Trudeau displayed "a certain combative spirit" on the matter. Reagan aides, however, fear that the negotiations could serve to legitimize the demands of some Third World nations for a "new economic world order." The administration also prefers its own approach of emphasizing loans or investments from the private sector, rather than direct government aid.

There have been discussions at the United Nations about launching such negotiations, and last month the heads of state of the European Economic Community called for a new round of talks "as soon as possible." But Mr. Reagan's aides are wary because of what they see as a lack of consensus on what such talks would entail. A White House official said Mr. Trudeau had spent more time on the issue last Friday than on any other. "We tried to find out, "What do global negotiations mean?" the official said. "It turns out that the term doesn't mean the same thing to the different persons who use it."

persons who use it."

He said that Mr. Reagan would be more comfortable with the term "dialogue" than "negotiations" to characterize his view.

The issue is seen as important because Mr. Reagan has been subjected to criticism for placing heavy emphasis on what he sees as the threat of Soviet intervention to the Third World—and not enough emphasis on aid to poor countries to build their resistance

Besides Mr. Trudeau, the new president of France, Francois Mitterrand, is expected by Reagan aides to press the hardest on "global negotiations." Administration officials said that Britain, West Germany and Japan were more sympathetic to the U.S. point of view on the subject.

The legal troubles over Multi-ponics surfaced after Max Hugel, a millionaire businessman brought by Mr. Casey to the CIA from the Reagan presidential campaign, resigned abruptly Tuesday morning as head of the agency's clandestine services. Mr. Hugel's resignation came bours after The Washington Post printed allegations by two New York stockbrokers that they had participated in 1974 with Mr. Hugel in prohibited manuevers to boost the stock of a firm Mr.

Hugel once owned. Multiponics filed for reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act. three years after its founding, accotding to the bankruptcy trustee's lawyer, Peter J. Butler of New Orleans. In January, 1973, Mr. Butler filed a motion arguing that all other creditors should take priority over Mr. Cases, and the other disover Mr. Casey and the other directors who were seeking repay-ment of personal loans to the firm.

Mr. Butler also filed a civil suit against Mr. Casey and the other directors seeking $2.1 million in damages. The suit and motion were combined. In December, 1976, a special master reported to the court that the damages were not warranted but that subordination of the elaims was. U.S. District Judge Alvin Rubin accepted the master's findings in January.

Ruling Appealed

One of Mr. Casey's co-defend-ants appealed Judge Rubio's rul-ing to the 5th Circuit. In an opin-ion by Judge John R. Brown, the appellate court said the record supported finding that the found-ing officers and directors engaged in a pattern of self-ioterest. The court questioned several business moves, iceluding the purchase by Multiponics of a Florida farm known as Lisbon Development Corp., owned by one of Multipon-

State workers for the first time found larvae in San Mateo County on Wednesday. No larvae had been tracked farther north than Palo Alto, which borders San Ma-teo County to the south. Of concern was a larvae infestation found Tuesday in Milpitas, on the east side of San Francisco Bay and only 50 miles and a mountain range away from the San Joaquin Valley.

Jerry Scribner, head of the state's Medfly eradication program, said the Milpitas discovery would add another 20 to 24 square miles to the spraying zone. That is in addition to the more than 120 square miles that had been set aside for spraying.

At a packed news conference after the National Wildlife Federation's call for his removal, Mr. Watt, unusually tense, said the White House has "not yet" made any effort to curb or tone down his plan to open public lands for re-source development.

'I have one loyalty and that's to the president, and to the oath of office and to the American people," Mr. Watt said when asked if his ability to operate had been hampered by mounting criticism.

Mineral Royalties Investigated

At the news conference, Mr. Watt announced a controversial plan to speed up the offshore leasing schedule for one billion acres of underwater lands during the next five years.

At the same time, he announced that a commission has been formed to investigate losses and the outright theft" of mineral royalties, primarily on Indian lands to New Mexico and Wyoming. The commission chairman, David F. ing firm to Scarsdale, N.Y., said that he hoped to uncover to six months the reason for losses of upto $4 billion this year and a projected $6 billion in 1982.

Contrary to earlier reports that Mr. Watt would tone down his accelerated offshore-leasing schedule, the secretary announced the full five-year plan as previously outlined in April. The plan will open up about 200,000 acres of offshore lands a year, he said. Although some oil-todustry spokesmen said the schedule would open too much land ton quickly, others have said that they would be prepared for the offshore drilling. One of the companies that has come out strongly in favor of Mr. Watt's schedule is Zapata Corp. in Houston, the offshore drilling company founded by Vice Presi-dent Bush to 1953. Mr. Busb sold

The Ideal Intermediary

The announcement by Northern Ireland Secretary Humphrey Atkins that the International Committee of the Red Cross will try to mediate an end to the hunger strike in the Maze prison is the most optimistic development in that situation since Irish nationalists. began fasting more than four months ago. It is not only the involvement of the Red Cross that is encouraging, but the fanfare provided hy Mr. Atkins and the fact that an official of the Northern Ireland office was immediately sent to the prison to tell the IRA men about the British government's decision. It suggests that London may have softened its opposition to negotiating under the pressure of the continuing strike.

The failure of a previous mediation effort by an Irish church group should not be seen as a had omen. There is a sense, this time, that the British government is responding to an increasing demand for a resolution to the situation that will avoid additional deaths without granting political status to the prisoners. The government has been widely hlamed for the hreakdown of the earlier attempt to end the hunger strike and it seems to be making a special effort now to show good will. If the prisoners just stick to their demands for a change in conditions and do not raise the political question again, chances are good that a settlement can be achieved. -

The Red Cross, as a neutral, nongovernmental agency identified with administering to the needy regardless of their political affiliations, is an ideal intermediary for this mission. The president of the United States, on the other hand, who was invited to intervene by the Republic of Ireland, would be a poor choice on all counts. He is both political and governmental, and therefore, cannot be neutral. President Reagan quickly displayed good judgement by rejecting a recommendation of the Irish Republic that he lend his good offices to help put an end to the latest Ulster crisis. The U.S. statement that the crisis is internal and has to be resolved by the parties is correct. The Red Cross, though, should be an acceptable arbiter to both sides.

Cambodia: Still a Sideshow

Cambodia remains a victim state. To Americans during the Vietnam War, it was an inconvenient sanctuary for the Viet Cong, a target to be bombed and invaded. Thus weakened, it then became a laboratory for the crackpot experiments of a Chinesebacked zealot, Pol Pot. He in turn was overthrown in 1979 hy the Soviet-backed Vietnamese, moving imperially to visit fresh sorrows on that trampled land.

Vietnam's crimes in Cambodia are real, and deserve the denunciations of a special United Nations conference this week. But the accusers pass too quickly over the crimes of Pol Pot, whose regime may have caused the deaths of 3 million Cambodians. He is "our" monster in this propaganda battle and his representative speaks for Cambodia at the United Nations, thanks to an unholy understanding between the United States and

For all the parties Cambodia is still a sideshow, a poignant testament to the corruptions of geopolitics. No remedy will flow from this UN meeting, which Moscow and Hanoi are boycotting. Vietnam obviously values control over Cambodia more than it

But that promise needs to be kept alive, as New Zealand has urged. The Indochina tangle can be untied only by focusing on real interests. If Vietnam insists on dominating Cambodia at all costs, there may be no way, to expel its 200,000 troops without superior force. But Hanoi's occupation is costly and may be negotiable if something other than a Chinese puppet regime can be created in

That would require wider security arrangements than have thus far heen discussed. They may appear out of reach at the moment, but South Asia has witnessed other dramatic realignments in recent years. Beyond denouncing the Vietnamese and their Soviet sponsors, the U.S. purpose in Cambodia should be to keep seeking a formula that for once turns geopolitics to Cambodians'

The Japanese-Americans

A Japanese-American named Fred Korematsu, after being rejected by the Army because of an ulcer, volunteered after Pearl Harbor to serve his country as a welder in a war plant. Instead, he and 120,000 other Japanese-Americans and Japanese resident aliens on the West Coast were driven from their homes and forced under military supervision into distant "relocation" camps, where the majority lived out the war.

The would-be welder sued, but the Supreme Court upheld the military in 1944 in Korematsu vs. U.S., although dissenting justice Robert H. Jackson described Korematsu's "crime" as solely the act of "being present in the state whereof he is a citizen, near the place where he was born, and where he lived all his life." Today, we recall the locations of the major internment camps used -Manzanar, Tule Lake, Minidoka, Topaz, Gila River, Poston, Heart Mountain, Granada, Jerome and Rohwer — only as desolate monuments to a lingering sense of shame in the United States.

On Tuesday, a federal commission began its liearings into the Japanese-American internment experience, the worst instance in modern U.S. history of an entire group being stripped overnight of its civil liberties as a result of calculated government policies. The Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, created by Congress last year, must determine (first) how and why the actions of military and political leaders, both in Washington and on the West Coast, caused the uprooting of the entire Japanese-American community when even the attorney general and the FBI director did not consider most internees a national security threat. Next, the commission has the difficult task of determining what financial compensation, if any, should be recommended for those who suffered internment. But its members recognize also that they must consider what steps might be taken to ensure that in some future national emergency - another whole group of Americans do not find themselves in collective jeopardy because of their race, ethnic background or national ori-

At the time, the much larger "enemy" communities of German-Americans and Italian- Americans largely escaped harassment, while the Japanese-Americans - elustered on the West Coast - bore the brunt of their fearful neighbors' post-Pearl Harbor mixture of racial antagonism, economic envy and genuine hysteria over a possible Japanese inAs for distinguishing between the over-whelming number of loyal citizens and resi-dent aliens and the small handful who might be working for or willing to work for imperial Japan, officials such as Lt. Gen. John L. DeWitt, West Coast military commander (who urged rounding up and interning the whole community) saw no problem: "A Jap is a Jap. It makes no difference whether the Jap is a citizen or not." In February, 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the ment, and the roundup began.

Of the 120,000 who then lost their homes, farms, husinesses and most other worldly possessions, two-thirds led a Spartan existence during the war in closely guarded confinement at concentration camps in the western interior.

The military irrelevance of the detention process soon became obvious. Unlike the wholesale internment that occurred on the mainland, in Hawaii (far closer to the actual theater of war) only about 1 percent of the Japanese population was detained. In the Aleutian islands, by contrast, about 1,000 Aleut-Americans - whose treatment the commission also intends to study - were placed in squalid camps for the entire war.

Few attempts have been made since World War II to compensate Japanese-Americans financially, and even the most extensive of these — the Japanese Evacuation Claims Act of 1948 — led to payments of only 10 cents on the dollar based on 1941 assessments of lost property. Whether Congress should spend billions now in a belated full-scale effort at genuine restitution is considered the most troublesome issue confronting the com-

Some congressmen and Japanese-American spokesmen have argued in favor of "reparations" for all the former internees, with each person receiving a stipend that - in some of the plans — would reach $25,000. This is extravagant and wrong. Even if across-the-board "reparation" funds were available, it is to cheapen the moral issue and to degrade the victims to suppose there is some kind of monetary bnyoff for the affront. A proper approach would involve. compensating only for the actual property losses suffered. But whatever the settlement. there is merit alone in the 16 days of public hearings planned by the commission to study that dreadful time when most of us incarcerated some of us solely for reasons of race and national ancestry.

Russians in Africa: A History of Failure

By Jonathan Power

MOSCOW — A Soviet general recently justified the presence of Soviet and Cuban troops in Ethiopia with a surprising observation: "We have had close connections with Ethiopia for a hundred years. In the czarist time there were important links be-tween their church and ours. Their students used to come here to study theology."

He could also have noted how, at the time of the building of the Suez Canal, the czarist government considered encouraging Ethiopia to expand its borders to the Red Sea. Relations between the two countries would be cemented by inviting the Ethiopian Church to fuse its apostolic succession with the Russian Orthodox.

It is often overlooked in the West just how hard the czars tried - and failed - to get a foothold in Africa at the time of the "great scramble." They were crowded out by the British, French, Germans, Portuguese and Italians. For a great power this was humiliating and threatens now to be rectified in the superpower age.

Certainly since the age of nuclear parity, which more or less coincided with developments in Soviet airlift capacity, the Russians have become increasingly daring in Africa, aware that Western mistakes, often give them easy openings.

Debate on Detente

Their most spectacular effort was in Angola — spectacular in the sense that it put Communist troops in direct confrontation with black Africa's worst enemy, the South Africans, and spectacular also in that it threw into sharp relief a debate that still runs - does detente in Europe mean a free hand for Soviet efforts in the Third World?

But Moscow only moved its piece on the board after the South Africans moved theirs, South African troops moved into Angola to help Jonas Savimbi's side in the civil war in June, 1975. The Cuban combat troops were only commit-ted to the side of Agostinho Neto in September. (It is still a matter of dispute whether Soviet arms arriving in substantial proportions in March were the trigger for U.S. co-vert military involvement in July or the U.S. decision to give $300,000 in covert funds in January was the trigger for the Soviet arms aid.)

The Soviet effort in Ethiopia has been far less politically rewarding. With Soviet and Cuban help the Somali regular army has been driv-en out of the Ogaden, the Ethiopi-an-owned but Somali-claimed province, and that has given the Russians some kudos in Africa.

Since again the United States appeared to be supporting a terri-torial aggressor. But the real running sore for Ethiopia is the war in Eritrea, and the internal practices of the Mengistu regime. The Eritrean war and other secession movements, although relatively quiet at the moment, could tie down the troops and finances of the central government for years.

Poverty Inherited

The Arabs will keep the rebels well enough supplied to make sure they bold their own. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam offers the Russians nothing. It is a cruel regime, with little respect in Africa. (The Russians have a knack of supporting barbarism — Idi Amin in Üganda and Macias Nguema in Equatorial

The only inheritance is some of the sharpest poverty in Africa. Strategically, Ethiopia is moderately valuable. But if mili-tary gain was the real Soviet purpose, the Russians should have made the decision to stay on Somalia's side in the early days of the Ogaden dispute. Then, at least, they would still have their base at Berbera, more useful than the Ethiopian port on the Dahlak Islands in the Red Sea.

The Ethiopian effort, in fact, is more typical of Russian performance in Africa than the Angolan adventure. Whether one looks at Egypt, the Sudan, Congo-Brazza-ville, Guinea, Mali or Ghana, the

A honeymoon period when the Africans appeared to welcome the Russians as a respite from the influence of the colonial power has been followed invariably by cynicism, alienation and eventual rejection as the host country found Russian diplomats interfering, their trade deals exploitative, their economic aid limited and uneven in quality, and their guns expensive.

For all this, there are situations where many African countries feel, for want of an alternative, they might need Soviet support. The most obvious is in southern Africa. Here the answer is for the West to make more of the running in the buildup of international pressure for change.

West German courts were restricted to trying Germans for crimes committed against German nationals. It was not until the early 1950s that they gained full jurisdiction, and it soon posed numerous legal, political, diplomatic, technical and moral problems.

One was that the sovereignty treaties barred the judiciary from prosecuting those already tried and subsequently pardoned and freed — by various Allied codrts. Another was that West German authorities initially did not - and could not -- know how many Nazi criminals had not been tried and were at large, some with assumed identities, many more — like Kurt Asche's late co-defendant - feeling complacently safe that "bygones" would be regarded as such.

Moreover, once West German courts did obtain jurisdiction, they faced the obstacle of judging genocide on the basis of the 19th century penal code's homicide section, of trying highly unconventional cases with restrictive rules of evidence and due process.

Economic Summits: The Flaw

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON — Almost any of the familiar, upbeat ciiches will do nicely for the final communique after next week's three-day meeting in Ottawa of the presidents and prime ministers of the seven largest industrial democ-

World economics is supposed to be the subject. The participants will be the United States, Britain, West Germany, France, Italy, Canada and Japan. And right now you can bet that - for the record their private discussions in their secluded rendezvous at Le Chateau Montebello will turn out to have been "free, frank and friendly ... a useful tour d'horizon ... a constructive exchange of views" -- or something of that tenor. That's how it's supposed to be at these annual affairs (this is the seventh). No decision-making or col-lective action is intended. As group therapy — or sensitivity training — it will be the more valuable since four of the leaders (President Reagan, President François Mitterrand of France, Premier Zenko Suzuki of Japan, and Premier Giovanni Spadolini of Italy) are first-time participants.

Bread and Butter

A little understanding here, some reassurances there as much as you could expect.
Which brings us to what may well be the fundamental flaw in economic summitry. The flaw lies in the essential inseparability of the economic issues tearing away at the Western alliance and the political and military issues that confound concerted action for West-

How do you talk about trade, for example, without talking not only of protectionist practices within the Western nations but trade is bread and butter for Euro-peans, and a strategic weapon for the Reagan crowd.

Energy, as an economic agenda item, takes you swiftly to nuclear nonproliferation and arms control — or to the military security of the Gulf. It actually did take last year's Venice meeting to an urgent joint declaration on Afghanistan.

In short, what the Ottawa sun-miteers should really be asking themselves is how long they can go on meeting this way. More precise-ly, the question is: How long can the Western allies make do with the various strictly limited and demonstrably inadequate ways they now employ to reconcile their ap-praisals of what it is they are up against around the world and what, together, should they do about it?

It is hardly a secret that the Europeans generally do not share the Reagan administration's perception of the Soviet threat—to Europe, or to the Third World. They do not like the overheated revival of Cold War emotions. They would test disarmament prospects before they would rearm. The Japanese don't even like to be in the room when increased military spending is discussed.

It is also no secret that the institutions and mechanisms to deal with these differences don't work. The Economist magazine recently warned that, The alliance has been in trouble plenty of times before, but this time is the worst yet."

Not content to carp, the magazine offered an ambitious cure: First, a study group, composed of "a small group of intelligent men" trusted by the NATO govern-ments, to do a 10,000 word study laying down firm recommendations of how to set things right.

Military Load

The next step would be for Mr. Reagan, with this "wise men's" report in hand, to call a summit of key NATO members and ask for a short list of "radical reforms." These would include recognition of the need for the West to rearm, coupled (for Europe's sake) with a more precise sense of the limits to it. In exchange for this, and some effective mechanism for a larger voice in alliance affairs, Europe would agree to shoulder a larger military load.

Other proposals abound The New York Council on Foreign Relations and its British, French and German counterparts recently published a study which includes unusually precise recommendations for handling political security problems outside the limited geographic area prescribed" by NATO. Among them: "principal nations" groups, with membership drawn from NATO but including outsiders directly involved. Such a group for the Gulf, for example, would include Japan. The study finds the seven-nation conomic summit to be a "useful-forum."-But it adds a few well-chosen words of advices "From now on [the summits] should be devot-ed at least as much to political and ones." In the quiet of their hidesway outside Ottawa, that's something the summitteers might want to talk about. © 1981, The Washington Post.

Few Refugees Willing to Accept Permanent Residence in Japan

Japan's contribution for the care dochinese refugees was totally unsatisfactory," said Koji Walanebe, deputy director of the Foreign Ministry's Asian Affairs Bureau.

"It took us three to four years to understand the importance of the problem and decide to handle it in positive way," said Yukio Amano, deputy director of the ministry's Refugee Affairs Division. "We had no experience in accepting refugees and took a defen-sive attimde."

Now the defensive attitude is taken by Vietnamese, who are grateful for the asylum that Japan has decided to grant to them but do not want to avail themselves of the Japanese offer of a permanent home. The offer is extended to all refugees who are in good health and willing to accept one of the many jobs that are available in this country, where unemployment is Altogether, 1,621 Victnamese are waiting to 24 camps run by religious groups and the Japanese Red Cross under UN auspices. Almost to a man, woman or child, according to Japanese and international officials, they want to go to the United States. For some, the motivation is fa-

"The refugees don't want to come to Japan very much," said Mr. Amano. "They don't dislike it, but they don't have it in mind."
The result is that the quota of

Euthanasia Society Issues Long-Delayed Guide on Suicide

By Elaine Davenport International Herald Tribune

ONDON - After a delay of more than a year, England's voluntary enthanasia society. Exit, has published its controversial guide on bow to commit suicide.

The booklet, "A Guide to Self-Deliverance" is sold for $6 (about $11) to people over age 25 who have been Exit members for at least three months. "We know a large oumber of people joined just to get the guide," acknowledged Nicholas Reed, Exit's general secretary. He noted that membership has risen from 2,000 in 1979, when the idea was suggested, in about 10,000 now, More than 500 members - most of them elderly and about 80 percent of them women — have received their copies. The booklet, which goes into great detail on how to commit suicide, was long held back because of disputes about whether it would encourage suicide. Reed, 34, and another Exit member, Mark Lyons, have been committed for trial on charges related to their activities with Exit. Lyons, 70, who is being held in Brixton prison, faces one charge of murder and eight charges of aiding and abetting suicide. Reed, who is out on bail, faces two charges of aiding and abetting suicide and three of conspiracy to aid and abet, a charge without precedent in Britain. The trial is expected this fall.

Another Exit member, Dr. Gordon Scott, a retired physician, had sued for a court injunction against the book-let's publication, but in May he withdrew the injuntion with others and to return or destroy it if they decide in after Exit promised to pay his legal costs.

One fear about the Exit booklet is that copies will fall into the hands of impulsive would-be suicides. To guard against this, members are asked not in share the booklet

The delay in issuing the Exit booklet has allowed similar groups around the world in publish their own versions. The first was Scottish Exit. it separated from the London-based group in order to publish "How To Die With Dignity." which came out last September.

The California euthanasia group Hemlock published its own booklet in early June. The head of Hemlock is Derek Humphrey, an English journalist now living in California who in 1978 wrote "Jean's Way," an account of his aiding the death of his terminally ill wife.

A Dutch right-to-die group recently published a booklet of detailed suicide instructions that is circulated to doc-

A society in West Germany is debating whether to reprint a chapter of a 1965 book on suicide that gives details on how in kill oneself. The chapter includes stark descriptions of different forms of drug overdose, poisoning and gasing, including the use of car exhaust fumes; how best in use alcohol and chloroform; and instructions for shooting or hanging oneself, slashing one's wrists or injecting air into one's body.

"Some of the methods in the German book are really rather horrifying," said Reed. "One of the intentions of our booklet was to suggest methods that would not be appallingly traumatic for survivors and which would be reasonably peaceful. And one section gives seven reasons r not committing suicide."
Exit sees its booklet as an interim measure, Reed said.

He said the group's aim is in change the law on euthanasia and "allow doctors to give it at the request of the Suicide is legal in England, but assisting or advising suicide is oot. Because Exit has not succeeded in changing the law — and "it seems very unlikely that we will get anywhere," said Reed — the booklet was seen as "the best alternative."

And the issue is being aired, which Reed believes is crucial to the group's campaign. "Our booklet has got the subject much more widely discussed than it has been up to oow, and there is hope that it will break down a taboo," he said.

Reporters have converged on Reed's basement office just off Kensington High Street. Some of the publicity is sympathetic, but some accuses Exit and Reed of selling death like scap. In contrast is the wide acceptance of the hospice movement, which uses pain control in ease terminal illness. Dame Cicely Saunders, 63, who in the late 1950s helped found the movement, was given her ritle in Queen Eliza-beth II's New Year's Honors List and was recently awarded the £90,000 Templeton Foundation Prize for Progress in Religion.

A curious sort of tug-of-war for the hearts and minds f Britain's elderly and ill has developed between Exit and the bospice movement.

"Hospices are probably more skilled than any other medical establishment at dealing with pain control,"
Reed conceded. "But it's misleading in claim that they have found the answer to the painful terminal illness."

Dame Cicely, in an interview earlier this year, dismissed Exit and similar groups: "I don't think that is the answer. I've often quoted an old lady who wrote an article in the Londoo Times saying buman oature being what it is enthanasia wouldn't be voluntary for long."

Reed argues that many people would rather die "at their own time in their own home" than in a hospital or hospice, and, be said, they ought to have that choice.

Song," with its "Chestnuts roasting on an open fire"), he is the author of three books.

"The first was a Western novel called 'Dollar Hide.' I followed that with 'The Other Side of the Rainbow,' a book about Judy Garland. Some people said the book was not very complimentary to Judy. I say that it was merely reportage of the two years we worked together and that sometimes the truth is not very palat-

His third book was another novel. "'Wynner' is an epic saga of a singer, and for the first time it's a book about a singer who isn't a thinly disguised Frank Sinatra The book isn't 'Princess Daisy,' but it's sold fairly well."

He is working on No. 4, an auto-hiography. "But I'm not doing what so many people in show busi-oess do. You know bow they tell all. Talk about everybody they've ever slept with. No way. Not that it's no one else's business. It's just that I don't think it's very gentlemanly.

Being known as a gentleman is important to Torme. "Of course it is. I think all of us are in this business because we need acceptance. It's not only a warm feeling but a necessary feeling to know that you're appreciated. Otherwise what's it all about? I need something more than money for my soul's sake. It also has to do with artistic experiment. People in this business are in this business because they need to know how good they are. For Torme, things have been very good: great reviews for his re-Carnegie Hall concerts, the standing ovation in Nice, the suc-cess of his music and books. Not long ago he was given a star in the sidewalk on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

"I'm four stars away from John Wayne. But then, I should explain at this star isn't really for me. I think it's important to leave this world being remembered as some one who was liked, someone other people are glad they knew. So I think this star is for my kids and my grandkids. It's there so they can stand by it a long time from now and be proud. Yeah, it's really

Mel Torme appears Friday night in Paris at the Olympia. A Saturday appearance in London was canceled cause of rioting there.

U.S. equities are at their lowest prices since February, and the advice that investors are getting is to wait for o rally to get under very.

CAPITAL GAINS RESEARCH believes a sounder approach is to anticipate rallies, and to be at the front of—not the back of—the queue. With gold sliding to $400 per ounce, less than half its price of 18 months ago, and with credit markets in disarray, Wall Street is saying there's no reason to buy stocks until some positive impetus moves the market. CAPITAL GAINS, to the contary, believes there IS a compelling reason to buy U.S. equities: They're a compelling reason to buy U.S. equities: They're chesp on a historical, fundamental, and technical a compelling reason to buy U.S. equities: They as cheap on a historical, fundamental, and technical basis.

Most investors lived in a world full of regress and retrospect. They wish they hadn't sold at or near the bought when Wall Street is in a emphoric state. They're victims of the hard instinct, buying when almost everyone else is buying, and selling during hinges of liquidation. CAPITAL GAINS preaches the opposite tack, and through its worldwide research operations selects those stocks which combine the qualities of heing oversold and being under quiet accumulation by those who recognize that a vacuum will inevitably and eventually he filled by eager buyers. XEROX and IBM at the present time fall into that category. This week's CAPITAL GAINS, report applains why BOEING, is selling at prices which defy any rational valuation; why certain mining stocks should be bought in spite of falling metals prices; and why some old-time Iavourites such as WOOLWORTH and EASTMAN KODAK are coming back into fashion. A SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT

Flexibility Lets Nation Adapt to Rapid Change

By Ken Whittingham

Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmad al-Sabah

UWAIT, a small desert state with an area of about 6,800 square miles and a small but growing population of 1.4 million, sits at the head of the Guif, a volatile area where any instability can threaten world peace.

Yet economically the government seems to have found the path to stability and progress, while politically the state has no real enemies and a growing list of friends. Long before the oil wells had been drilled, known learned that the survival of a small nation among larger neighbors depends on skilled diplomacy and determined nonalignment.

This philosophy was followed by Sheikh Mubarak, who ruled the state at the turn of the century and is considered by many to be the founder of the modern state. He carefully played off the British against the Turks at the time of the great colonial drive to control the Galf, and ended up with British protection against the Turks without the kind of political interference displayed by British political agents elsewhere in the Gulf states.

Eighty years later, the Gulf is vital to the rest of the world as a source of oil, and Kuwait, the third-largest Arah producer after Sandi Arabia and Iraq (when the latter is producing normally), is especially important. But Knwaiti leaders do not expect anyone to seize the oil fields by military means, and rather see the future in terms of new forms of cooperation between oil producers and developed and developing countries.

Gulf Security

The Kuwaitis have long said that Gulf se-curity is purely a matter for the Gulf states themselves. Kowait is the only state in the Gulf that has full diplomatic relations with both the United States and the Soviet Union.

Knwait is a vital member of the Gulf Cooperation Council. The newly appointed secre-tary-general of that organization is Abdullah Yacoub Bishara, former Kuwaiti ambassador at the United Nations and one of the most able and respected diplomats in the Gulf.

During a recent Gulf tour, he explained the council's attitude, which reflects the policy of his own government, in an interview with a Sandi newspaper: "Those who believe that the Gulf Cooperation Council was formed to clash with the Red Army are suffering from a com-plex of imagination, considering the Gulf as part of the Western strategy to defend Western interests. Those who think that the Red Army is the major threat to the Gulf are also suffering from nightmares and delusions."

Kuwait believes that the main threat to the Gulf is Israel and its stand on the Palestinians. The nation has a vested interest in a solution to the Middle East crisis and the establishment of a Palestinian state, given that it opened its doors to refugees — about 20 percent of the population of Kuwait is Jordanian/Palestinian, It has benefited from the Palestinian community, which has provided much of the educated cadre in government and the private sector for many years. At the same time, radical Palestinian factional pobtics are a permanent threat to peace and stability, as numerous bombing incidents have revealed in recent years. Such incidents—which cannot always be blamed on Palestinian extremists because there are other disruptive elements in Kunnit are proportional. tive elements in Kırwait - are more of an irritant than a true threat to state security, but the government obviously wants to avoid them.

Another recent source of problems for Kuwait's security forces has been the unstable situation in Iran. On a number of occasions, Iranian warplanes have crossed into Kuwaiti airspace during the Iraqi-Iranian conflict, and more than once trucks have been attacked on Kuwait's exit roads. Moreover, Kuwait's firm commitment to Iraq, both politically and as a transit for Iraq-bound cargo, has inevitably al-

of trouble, there is little evidence that the aumorities cannot cope with most threats. The security forces in Kuwait have recently been reviewed and a number of senior officers replaced to increase efficiency. And one important feature of the security forces is that unlike those of some of the smaller Gulf states, they are manned by Kuwaiti nationals.

Domestically, the traditional government, still largely in the hands of the ruling family, is kept on its toes and sometimes openly criti-cized by the revived National Assembly and the national press. Kuwait's press is independent of government control, although it receives government support in order in survive. It is renowned for its variety of opinions and its. outspokenness on domestic and Arah matters. and it is generally allowed to operate freely.

The high level of political interest and awareness displayed by educated Kuwaitis has no doubt been a powerful spur in the often innovative steps taken in social and economic development. benefits are available to immigrant residents. Kuwain citizens, through an active private sector, have also played a full part in the development process, more so than elsewhere in the Gulf, except in Bahrain.

There are also problems. One of the first demands of the new National Assembly was for a 30-percent pay raise for Kuwaitis and 20 percent for non-Kuwaitis to meet the rising cost of living. There were also demands for higher pensions and social security. Such demands led in part to the dissolving of the assembly in 1976.

The government has sought during the last few years in hold down inflation, which is es-pecially difficult in a society that has a high per-capita income and is almost totally de-pendent imports. Salary levels will almost certainly be increased soon, but the question is in what extent the government can control the Reliance on a large immigrant labor force exacerbates this problem, putting pressure on exacerbates this problem, putting pressure on social services and housing in particular. There is widespread concern about the number of immigrants who stay illegally after the completion of their contracts. Many of the workers are bachelors — the Planning Ministry estimates that there are 174,000 hachelors in Kuwait — creating a social imbalance and a large need for single-occupancy dwellings. which are not widely available.

In the past, bowever, one of Kuwait's strengths has been its ability to adapt in new situations. While important domestically, this flexibility has also been vital internationally, where tiny Kuwait has in two decades gained prominence, particularly as a friend of developing nations through its aid allocations. Kuwait established its first aid fund in 1961, the first of the oil producers to recycle revenues in this way. Through aid programs and foreign investment in a variety of fields, Kuwait has built a network of economic interaction that inevitably leads to political friend-

While Kuwait uses its oil revenues for aid and to create political alliances, it has not forgotten that oil wealth will not last forever.

A Reserve Fund for Future Generations was set up in August, 1976, It receives 10 percent of annual state revenue plus the profits from the state's General Reserve Fund, The fund, designed to be of benefit to the generation that misses out on the oil era, is untouchable until the year 2000.

Kuwait's future does not depend on reserve funds or insurance schemes, however, but on whether the state is able to create a wide enough economic base to survive beyond the oil era, and on whether it can develop socially and politically enough to persuade its educat-oil sector industry, although the government has been more and more involved in joint sec-tor investments in recent years.

Diversification and industrialization bave become catchwords in the Gulf region, but the problem of reducing dependence on a nonrenewable source of revenue is too complex to be dismissed with two words. For Kuwait, diversification has meant a great deal more than industrialization, as the current economic scene is beginning to demonstrate.

From the early 1950s, Kuwait, even with the minimal price of oil and the low percentage of royalries it was getting was looking forward.

Development of the infrastructure was the priority, and the Department of Electricity was set up to create a statewide network to end thereliance on privately owned generators. The same rapid development took place for water. Kuwait's revolutionary efforts to solve the water shortage have brought experts from all over the world to see if its systems can be applied elsewhere. An early start on power and water supplies gave the state the opportunity for an equally early start on industrialization, and by the beginning of the 1960s the first industrial area, at Shu'aybah, was commissioned. Later a major complex emerged at Shuwaykh. While a great deal of industry concentrates on supplying the construction business, there is now a diversification into consumer goods to cut imports. The private sector has been prominent from the beginning in the development of the non-

Limits to Projects

While a certain amount of industrialization is vital to turn a desert fishing and trading post into a modern city with a highly developed infrastructure, there are clearly limits in the viability of certain types of industry, given the constraints of the domestic market, with a population of 1.4 million, and the restricted opportunities for export. Kuwait's planners have been careful on the whole not to waste precious capital on grandiose schemes with no economic viability.

Domestic industry is basically geared to supplying the domestic market and to some extent the Gulf market. To reduce dependence on revenues from crude oil, Kuwait has long been interested in downstream and gas operations, both to diversify the oil industry and to increase the value-added contribution of oil to the national economy.

The Kuwait National Petroleum Co., founded in 1961 as a joint public and private sector enterprise, operates one of the most sophisticated refinery complexes in the world at Shu'aybah, the first all-bydrogen complex m the world. The plant has a capacity of about 200,000 barrels a day and provides more than 30 grades of product to meet the demand of local companies.

The Petrochemical Industries Co. has been producing fertilizers for years, and plans are under study for an aromatics plant, although this may be reviewed because of Kuwait's decision in participate in a petrochemicals project in Bahrain in which Saudi Arabia is a partner.

Tanker Force

Besides producing downstream products, the nation must also get them to the market. Kuwait, as a longtime maritime state, has been huilding up a sizable tanker force under the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co., already the largest in the Arab world. Also in the shipping business, the United Arah Shipping Co. — which, although owned by the seven Arah Gulf states, continues to be a largely Kuwaiti business — is beginning to show healthy profitability.

One of the most important long-term industrial developments, inaugurated in 1979, was called simply the Gas Project. For years, vast quantities of cheap energy and raw materials in the form of gas associated with oil have been burned off through flaring. In 1976, work began on a major complex to make use of the associated gas from a daily oil production fig-ure of more than 3 million harrels a day. This gas provides not only energy and feedstock for local industry, thus giving domestic industry a competinve edge over imports, hut also provides additional exports.

The contributions of Kuwait's industry, however rapidly it expands, will always be minimal compared with oil revenues, and there is a tendency to dismiss such efforts as being fanciful and uneconomic. But this ignores a number of factors.

While it is true that oil produces most of the state revenues, those revenues are consistently in excess of the requirements of the national economy. The new state budget for the year that began on July 1, based on the expectation of continued steep rises in the price of crude oil exports, estimated that revenues will rise to (Continued on Page 8S)

Faylokah I.

A! Amadi C Ming of Ahmadi

AST FEBRUARY, elections were held for the National Assembly, which has taken its place in the nation's political life after an enforced absence of four years. It is the only democratically elected assembly in the Gulf region and has been a nearly constant feature of Kurwait's political system since the late Sheikh Abdullah al-Salem al-Sabah, the ruler from 1950 to 1965, changed the regime from an absolute monarchy to a constitutional system. In August, 1976, Sheikh Sabah al-Salem al-Sabah decided that it was necessary to suspend the constitution and dissolve the assembly sine die. Following his accession on the last day of 1977, the present ruler, Sheikh Jaber al-Ahmad al-Sabah, promised that the constitution would be reviewed and that democracy would return to Kuwait. That promise has been fulfilled.

The National Assembly is important to the political process in Kuwait for a number of reasons. Since the mid-18th century, when the al-Sabah family achieved prominence in Kuwait, there has been a relatively open form of government, with the ruler's door open for consultation with his people. But the growing sophistication of state affairs has made direct contact between ruler and people more difficult, and the immigrant population, accounting for nearly 60 percent of the total of about 1.4 million, also distorts channels of communi-Kuwaitis on the whole remain politically aware and deeply concerned about the affairs taking place in their country, especially the growing cadre of intellectuals, whose role is vital to the future of Kuwait. It is thus important to the country that their voice be beard and that they do indeed participate rather than join the "brain drain" to the West or to other.

Reflecting popular concern in domestic affairs, the National Assembly, since its creation in 1963, has been anything but a rubber stamp for palace decisions. During the early 1970s, when negotiations were under way for the government to bny a 25-percent share in the Kuwait Oil Co., the National Assembly pushed for an immediate 60-percent holding and was thus instrumental in the rapid achievement of national control of the oil in-

When the assembly was dissolved in 1976, it was engaged in a deadlocked dispute with the Cabinet over levels of social benefits at a time of rapid inflation. Moreover, a loose Arab na-tionalist bloc formed among young deputies as early as 1965 was pressing for radical reforms. The combined pressure of a difficult financial situation and an explosion of prices following the major increase in oil revenues added to a turbulent political situation in the Arab world the best-known radicals from the previous body, like Ahmad al-Khaub, failed to win seats, and there was a feeling among some observers that this would be an assembly without about Article 35 introduced into the Press and Publications law, which gives the government the right to suspend or punish papers that it considers to be acting against the national mterest. Deputies backed by Kuwait's strident national press are arguing that the clause is against the spirit of the 1963 constitution. which guarantees freedom of the press, although that constitution is itself still under re-

The most important long-term question raised in the first session of the new assembly concerns the political rights of women. In the end, however, only adult males were allowed to enter the electoral register and stand for election, as prescribed in the constitution.

nues were small. According to the provisional results of the 1980 population census, there are now fractionally more women than men in the population. Kuwaiti women represent 20.9 percent of the total population, while Kuwaiti men account for 20.6 percent.

Gap Has Narrowed

With more than half of Kuwait's native population of about 560,000 under the age of 25, the argument that women do not have the necessary educational background to participate in the democratic process is no longer valid. By 1975, there were 1,224 female graduates against 2,755 men, and the gap has narrowed considerably. Indeed, the Ministry of Education recently announced that in the coming academic year 1,500 female students had been accepted by the technical and vocational training institutes, against 1,300 boys. In Kuwait, unlike any other state in the Gulf, women can be found holding positions up to the highest level of seniority in government and private sector enterprises.

A female engineering graduate recently pointed out in one of Kuwait's leading Arabic newspapers that Kuwaiti men of the 1960s and 1970s who play a leading role in national af-fairs would not have reached the necessary degree of education without the women who had to bear responsibility for domestic life in the pre-oil days, when the men were away at sea for months.

There is an even more vital factor in support of giving women greater participation. Since Kuwaitis are a minority of 41 percent in their own country, and half of that number is women, the state cannot ignore the work-force potential of half the population if it is to retain national control over the expanding economy.

Already Kuwait is more liberal towar vomen than most of its neighbors. The veil is rarely worn by the younger generation, and events in which men and women participate together are more frequent. But male domiace and segregation are still deeply rooted. and can be demonstrated by the fact that a new ice-skating center has an Olympic-size rink for men only, while women are admitted to a smaller rink along with children.

Given the dominance of television viewing as a leisure activity in the Gulf states, the Institution is a vital factor in Gulf cooperation and education, although its influence will extend throughout the Arab world.

One project results from a decision by Gulf health ministers to improve standards of hygiene in the region. The Gulf Institution is cooperating with Telepool, European Tele-vision Program Office, a subsidiary of Bavarian and Swiss Television, to produce a 52-program series on health education. Scientific help will be provided by the Gulf States Health Organization based in Riyadh, and all possible television and radio techniques will be used to create a maximum impact through a combination of television programs, radio spots and advertising spots. The project will take two years to complete.

A seven-year project involves the produc-tion of 156 episodes in a series on Islamic and Arah civilization and culture, attempting to offer a new approach to the past and present of the Arah world that will attract the ordinary viewer rather than the academic mind. Research has been carried out by a team of distinguished Arab education experts under the chairmanship of Dr. Mchammed Jawad Redda of Kuwait University. The series provides a unique basis for pre-school education in the Arab world, and introduces the concept that learning can be fun.

Education alongside entertainment has be-come the philosophy behind the Institution's productions. As Mr. al-Yussul explained, the institution is not a commercial production unit, although it strives to cover costs through sales. A more important objective is to raise the standard of television productions in the Arah world and at the same time provide a locally produced alternative to material bought from the West.

Thus a series being shown in the Gull states, entitled "Hayanna," or "Our Life," deals with the generation gap in the contemporary Arah world. Thirteen episodes cover such things as first pregnancies, the early days of marriage, difficulties of adolescence and other familiar issues presented within a dramatic context and based on scientific re-

In the short term, these economic pressures will continue because there is still much development needed. But in the loog term, Kuwait is building a strong and efficient base to service and supply regional markets, and as international

Even the fastest rate of development in the world cannot go fast enough to absorb all that revenue, and so Kuwait is able to organize its finances sensibly, both through saving and investing, and this has shown the farsighted approach of the planners.

The savings plan is straightforward. In 1976, a Reserve Fund for Future Generations was established; each year, it receives 10 percent of state revenue plus all profits earned on the state's General Reserve Fund. Both capital and interest oo the fund are intouchable until the year 2000.

Investment has taken many forms. Kuwait was the first Arab state to move into the world of foreign investment, and with increasing funds available and developing experience, the state has made a significant impact on the financial world, and even more directly on the developing world.

lo purely financial terms, Kuwait's efforts to recycle its oil surpluses have produced an investment income that now approaches 50 percent of the value of government spending. This aid is a form of investment, in that it is mostly geared to infras-tructural projects that will help the development of an economy and therefore help create markets for which Kuwait will be in a position to compete. Moreover, the political frienships resulting from such aid are important to a small, oonaligned state. This was the first full-length feature made in the Gulf, and he used Kuwaiti actors with little experience of the film world.

Perhaps even more surprising was that the film, which dealt with the hardships of the pearl diver's life in the pre-oil days, was a critical account of exploitation and poverty, and that it by no means suggested that the oil industry had created a narrow oil industry had created a para-dise. EDUCATION is the gift bestowed upon Kuwait's younger generation by the nation's great oil wealth.

About 10 percent of annual na-nional expenditures go to ensuring that from kindergarten to gradua-tion day Kuwaiti students have the best education that money can provide — but free of charge to them, right down to textbooks and uniforms.

It is a sensible policy because af-It is a sensore poncy occause ar-ter oil Kuwait has only one natural resource, its people, and the sur-vival of the state will evenually depend on the intelligence of fu-ture generations and their ability to transform the traditional business acumen of the Kuwaiti trader into the skills necessary for more sophisticated international deal-

Education in Kuwait began in 1911 when a group of merchants set up a school to train a few clerks; it taught arithmetic and correspondence. The school wid-ened its scope, but it closed in 1931 when the slump in the pearl trade crushed Kuwait's economy. In 1936, a new education system was started staffed mostly by Palestinians from the first wave of exiles, and the first girls school opened in 1937. Only Bahrain among the Gulf states had a formal if limited education system at

Now there are more than 500 schools catering to a student population of more than 250,000 boys and girls between the ages of 6 and 18. Because 50 percent of Kuwaiti citizens are under 21, it is easy to see how important the advances in education are for the future. Indeed, because of high expenditures and concentrated planning and effort, Kuwaiti schools have an average student teacher race of 10-to-1, a figure unparalleled in the

Unlike many Arab academic establishments, the university has a progressive attitude toward science subjects, and has taken on a social as well as a purely academic role by offering night classes to people who did not receive a formal education in their youth.

Economic Demand

While engineering and medicine courses provide skills desperately needed in the society, there are complaints that the university is not sufficiently geared to economic demand. Deputies in the National Assembly have recently called for the creation of a petroleum and

Yet housing has been given top priority. A generous plan for buy-ing land from Kuwaitis at high prices in the 1960s was initially aimed at a direct redistribution of wealth. The few Kuwaitis who owned no land were given land that was then bought by the gov-erament. Once most of the land was in the hands of the government, the old Kuwait city was demolished and reconstruction be-

Houses and land were made available to citizens with no deposit, a repayment period of 25 years and at 2 percent interest, and the selling price was usually subsi-dized. For those who could not afford to buy, low-income housing was available at rents fixed at a maximum of 5 percent of the tenant's income. By the end of 1974, after a period of rapid construction that provided jobs as well as bouses, 13,500 low-income group housing units had been made available.

The shortage is exacerbated by two factors. One is that 60 percent of Kuwaitis are under 25, which means that demand by citizens alone increases not only with population growth but also as young men set up families.

In addition, according to a government estimate, the cost of building a high-rise appartment in Kuwait city, because of rising construction costs and even more because of the rising cost of land, is about four times higher than the cost of a similar building on Park Avenue in New York. But most Kuwaitis do not like

Road Death Rate Is Highest in World

OIL REVENUES have given Kuwait international status and recognition. Its welfare system is the envy of many more devel-oped states, and in other fields. ranging from oil refining to foreign aid, Kuwait has set examples. But Kuwait beads one international list that is more a matter of shame. although the fault lies with individ-

The death rate from road accidents is the highest in the world, according to Maj. Nabil Shuhaiber, the director of planning in the Traffic Department, in a re cent interview with the Arab Times of Kuwait. The statistics be quoted told a gruesome tale.

One death and seven injuries occur per 57 traffic accidents - there were 24,891 accidents in 1980. The fatality rate in road accidents in Kuwait is one for every 2,000 people, against one per 5,000 people in West Germany, for example,

What causes such a high rate of accidents and deaths? First, this small nation, with most of the population concentrated in Kuwait city, simply has too many cars. With a population of oearly 1.4 million in 1980, there were 542,940 registered vehicles, an increase of nearly 10 percent from 1979. The result is long lines at intersections, in spite of three multi-lane highways in the center of the city and probably the best system of road signs and traffic signals to be found anywhere. Frustration at the length of time taken to drive relauvely short distances in extremely bot conditions does not lead to good driving.

The second factor is sheer incompetence on the part of drivers. Maj. Shuhaiber also produced statistical evidence for this claim.

Traffic Violations

In 1980, the traffic police issued 130,057 tickets for traffic violations, which means one violation for every four driving licenses beld in Kuwait. Of these, 35,867 were for parking offenses, 12,986 for driving in the wrong direction, 11,217 for crossing red lights, 8,268 for speeding, 7,193 for driving on the pavement and 1.188 for

The authorities are doing their best to improve standards. Last year, more than 95,000 people applied for driving licenses, and about 8,000 took the driving test each month. Only 35,000 were actually issued licenses — not be-cause the test had been made more difficult, Maj. Shuhaiber said, but because many applicants simply did not know bow to drive. He called for an improvement in the standard of driving schools and instructors as a first step toward improving general standards.

Quite apart from accidents. which can be reduced by a more responsible attitude on the part of drivers, the pressure of so many vehicles has forced the government to begin major road programs to ease traffic flow in areas that in many cases have only been recently developed. A 350-kilometer network of highways is being constructed to take some of the load of roads in the center of Kuwait city onto ring roads.

The road program is expected to cope with the traffic up to the year 2000, by which time planners are already coovinced that a new program will be necessary. As the city develops, so the problems of creating road systems become more complex and create more disruption. The cost per kilometer of road increases dramatically every

A Developing Nation Takes Leading Role in Aid to Third World

MANY WESTERNERS have Arab world would promote politi-accused the Organization of cal security. Petroleum Exporting Countries and particularly Kuwait because of its stand on oil price rises - of crippling the economies of developing countries through fuel prices, yet few people are aware of the pioneering role played by Kuwait in developing new forms of aid to the developing world, or of the scale of the aid programs.

Even before 1973, when the price of a barrel of crude oil was less than $3, Kuwait's total flow of government finance to the Third World was more than $2 billion. With the increase in revenues, the aid expanded. Between 1973 and 1976. the aid was about $5.4 billion, or 11 percent of gross natiooal product, 22 percent of OPEC aid and 4 percent of the net flow from Development Assistance Committee countries.

Not only is the extent of the aid significant bot also the form and motives for such contributions, which have been a model for changing the structure of finance between wealthy and less wealthy

The most important and innova-tive organ through which Knwait disburses aid is the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development (KFAED). It was established in 1961 with a declared capital of nearly $700 million and a lending capacity of three times that figure. Its purpose was "to assist Arab and other states in developing their economies."

Stringent Conditions

KFAED is funded by the state but its operations are independent. It offers funds on soft terms but under stringent conditions. It will usually finance on more than 50 percent of a project. The plan must be vital to the recipient country's economic development and involve host government financing. To ensure a recycling of development funds, the project must be self-liquidating within a reasonable term. Financing is paid in installments according to the progress of a project, which is constantly reviewed.

The motives for establishing the fuod initially were obvious. Kuwait, already wealthy although oot fabulously rich, was seeking membership in the United Nations and wished to be taken seriously as a member of the international community. Moreover, aid to Arab countries in particular was a means to regional solidarity, while the effect of aid in improving the gap between rich and poor in the

A great deal of aid in the early years was given to Egypt, Syria and Jordan, the front-line states facing Israel, especially following the 1967 and 1973 wars. Sudan, North Yemen and other desperately poor states also received their share. After 1973, the flow went outside the Arab world to Africa, Asia and even poor European countries, as Kuwait took an increasing role through OPEC in attempts to create a new economic order in which the developing nations would play a more significant

New Relationship

Kuwait, despite its wealth, is itself a developing country. Thus it was a leader in moving aid from developing to developing nation. For the first time, a great deal of economic aid was available from a economic aid was available from a source other than a superpower or a former colonial power. A oew Sahah, decided that the benefits form of relationship based on mutual benefit was developing.

Unlike advanced countries, Kuwait was not lonking for a mar-ket for its exports — the develop-in the world — this in a tiny state ing countries are minimal con-sumers of oil, and sufficient markets already exist. But Kuwait oceds outlets for its surplus funds that will provide a secure investment in the short and the long term. It also needs food security, because it has no hope of becom ing self-sufficient.

Furthermore, as Kuwait does not manufacture arms and there-fore cannot sell arms or offer military aid, its contributions are geared solely toward the develop-ment of Third World economies that in the end will provide Kuwait and the Gulf oot only with food security and alternative markets for limited industrial output, but, as the Kuwaitis see it, with political security against interference from the superpowers.

Variety of Projects

KFAED is financing projects for irrigation canals in Sudan, railways in Pakistan, oil refineries, power stations, roads and agricul-ture. More than 40 countries have benefited from about 150 loans since the fund was established.

The fund has won high praise from those involved in the problems of financing Third World de-velopment and has shown results in improving the economies of a number of countries.

While KFAED deals only with projects aimed at economic develNot only is the extent of the aid significant but also the form and motives, which have been a model for changing the structure of finance between rich and developing nations.

The General Authority has financed the building and staffing of hospitals, clinics, teaching insti-tutes, schools and the University of San'a in North Yemen. It is financed by an annual appropriation that forms part of a special supplementary state budget.

should be shared by all the people of Knwait, and moved to create the most comprehensive system of in the world — this in a tiny state with a small population and no real administrative infrastructure. Since then, social services and especially education and health have taken priority in the annual budget allocations, with the result that Kuwait has become one of the best-equipped states in the Gulf and the Arab world. The health service recently received an international vote of confidence when a Kuwaiti delegation led by Dr. Hani Shuheiber, who heads the heart unit at Kuwait's chest hospital, was invited to be an active participant in the first international conference on equipment for open heart surgery in England this month.

The delegation, the only one invited from the Arab world, was to present an original research paper on a new chemical-induced system of refrigeration of the heart during surgery. The system has proved successful in Kuwait and is in use in a number of Western centers.

High Success Rate

Kuwait entered the field of open heart surgery when a unit was opened in 1976. Since then, 450 operations have been carried out with a success rate of 92 percent, equal to that achieved in Britain or the United States. That Kuwait should prove to be a pioneer in an advanced form of surgery is a tribute to the progress achieved since 1936, when the state had one doctor, one pharmacist and a free clinic. By 1949, as the oil began to flow, the Amiri hospithe first in Kuwait, was opened, and the government employed four doctors. Today there are 1,500 doctors on the government payroll and more than 250 in the private sector, providing a net-work of medical services for

Kuwaitis and foreigners alike. The opening of the Amiri hospital, which at first had 100 beds, signaled the beginning of a major expansion program to deal with the state's health problems as quickly as possible without charge to the patient. In the same year, 1949, a hospital for the mentally ill was opened. By 1952, sanatoriums were available for cases of tuberculosis, which was a serious problem in Kuwait as in most underdeveloped countries. Tuberculosis has been in effect eliminated through programs carried out in consulta-tion with the World Health Organ-ization. Smallpox was also quickly

The importance of preventive health measures such as immunization campaigns is underlined by fact that the last major smallpox epidemic in Kuwait, in 1932, resulted in 4,000 deaths in 10 days — when the population was probably no more than 40,000.

The al-Sabah bospital, among the largest and best-equipped in the Middle East, was opened in 2. Built at a cost of more than $13 million, the 700-bed hospital offered a wide range of specialist

Development Program-

A new development program in-cludes the 1,050-bed Mubarak the Great bospital complex, situated near the densely populated sub-urbs of Hawalli and As Salimiyah, the recently opened Fahaheel hos-pital with 500 beds, and a number of other smaller hospitals and renovation programs that together will provide an additional 3,000 hospital beds. The aim is to have six beds for every 1,000 people, a much higher ratio than is available in most advanced industrial coun-

The main problem is how to ac-quire the highly skilled medical staff to use the sophisticated facilities. While a medical faculty at Kuwait University, plus students studying abroad, will eventually have a small impact on the staffing problem, it is not realistic to ex-pect that Kuwait's small popula-tion will be able to provide enough Competition for foreign staff is high, with virtually every state in the Gulf involved in establishing sophisticated hospitals and offerng similar salaries and incentives to staff from abroad. Expansions of hospital facilities alone dictate a oeed for an estimated 10,000 additional staff members at a time when there is a worldwide shortage of qualified doctors and nurses.

trained medical staff to run such a large health service.

A further problem is acquiring the services of top consultants when the demand for their skills is relatively low, given the small population. This is being solved by bringing in foreign specialists for limited visits, and there are proposals for consultants to be bired on a regional basis to serve all the major Gulf hospitals.

Kuwait's intention to reduce its reliance oo foreign experts and cut the large bills paid to hospitals in the West for the treatment of Kuwaiti patients is demonstrated by the money and effort put into research of the kind carried out at the heart surgery unit.

Another example of local initiative, on a lesser scale, is in ambu-lances. A Kuwaiti automobile engineer, Abdelrazaq al-Awadi, has designed the conversion of a station wagon into a fully equipped ambulance. This not only is more suited to the climate than imported vehicles, but the local conversion will cost nearly $20,000 less per vehicle. The Ministry of Health is already buying the converted station wagons, and there are hopes that Kuwait will soon be exporting the model to oeighbor-increases.

If Kuwait is to maintain a full-scale free health service with the highest standards, such initiatives will be required at every level. A constantly increasing population and a communing influx of foreign labor have already placed the health service under heavy pressure. And although the cost of providing health services has increased dramatically, the new gen-eration of Knwaitis brought up with such free services expects the

There are already differences between services for Knwaitis and foreigners. There are plans, for example, to obtain kidneys for trans-plant from abroad for Kuwaiti papents, while legislation is sought to allow local donors' kidneys to be used. Foreigners will have to wait until the program is widened. If pressure on services leads to one kind of health service for Kuwaitis and another for expatri-ates, it could lead to unrest and therefore to security threats in a nation where more than 50 percent of the population is foreign.

The legislation also would deregulate key portions of the telephone industry, including manu-One analyst said the main factors affecting the market were "languor and indifference" adding that investors are holding back until they get a clear signal that interest rates will start to move down. The Dow Jones industrial average closed at 955.48, up 1.33 points after being fractionally low-er most of the day. Advances led declines by 767 to 672; volume fell to about 39.01 million shares from called anticompetitive practices.

Sen. Hollings objected to the 48.95 million on Wednesday.

Investors Nervous

Analysis said investors were also worried that mooey supply figures to be released Friday will be up sharply, which could adversely affect interest rates.

Some projections have placed the rise in the money supply figure as high as $5 billion. An analyst said investors will probably cootinue to exercise caution Friday unless they see some indication that the Federal Reserve is relaxing its monetary policies.

Most trading activity centered on energy and natural resource issues benefiting from the merger speculation that has swept the matket for the last week.

Slower Trading

Analysts said the slower Big Board trading indicated that many institutions were staying on the sidelines because they were uncertain about the course of interest

Published reports said banks are expected to lower their prime rate, but may wait until oext week. Takeover speculation has domi-nated the market in the last couple of weeks. These situations are creloans. This, in turn, is producing upward pressure on interest rates ## that are at near-record levels.

On the trading floor, Conoco, which has been center stage on Wall Street all week, was active. Conoco, the subject of a bidding war, added 15 to 871/2; Dupoot rose % to 47%, and Seagram lost % to 551/2. DuPont has offered $7.5 bilbion for the company in a revised bid. Joseph Seagram & Sons also is bidding for Coooco. G.D. Searle, which jumped 1% points Wednesday, was receiving attention after an opening block of 138,000 shares at 32%. The Federal Drug Administration approved on Wednesday a Searle's sweetener product for marketing. Analysts believe the new product will add substantially to Searle's earnings. Connecticut General Mortgage and Resity, which climbed 4½ points Wednesday, made the active list with a block of 140,600 shares at 414, and Morton-Norwich rose 14 to 32; Rhone-Poulenc plans to sell its 20.3 percent stake in the company [see related stories in 'Business Briefs' oo this page].

Reliance Group, which skidded 74 points Wednesday, was lower.

Seagram Seen Aided In Fight for Conoco

NEW YORK - Speculation on Wall Street about the multibillion-dollar battle for Conoco has turned to reports that Seagram may get a partner in the bidding

And, in a development that Wall Street analysts said they could not yet explain, the Marathon Oil Co., already considered a takeover target, said it was arranging bank loans totaling $5 billioo. The credit was being put together through a group headed by the Chase Man-hattan Bank.

Mobil Texaco Marathon refused to elaborate on the purposes of the credit, other than to say that the funds would be in addition to others already available. The loan is roughly as large as those being organized by other companies involved in the bidding for Conoco.

Mobil, widely expected to be planning a bid, is thought to have lined up $5 billion in loans. Texaco, another potential bidder, is said to have some $5.5 billion in similar loan commitments. took on a partner, the move would be unrelated to the Marathon loan month by Du Pont, Seagram of-fered $85 a share, $3.8 billion in cash, for 51 percent of Conoco. Seagram said that it would be ready to buy the stock and pay for it as early as next week.

Du Pont countered on Tuesday by raising its bid to $95 a share for 40 percent of Conoco and to 1.7 of its shares for each of the other 60 percent of Conoco's shares.

Sizing up the two bids, many
Wall Street analysts ooted that although Sengram was offering somewhat less than Du Pont, it was prepared to pay oext week, while Du Pont still faced a major antitrust investigation by the Jus-tice Department and would be noable to pay until it got clearance, which could mean a month's delay.

Scant Chance Seagram's edge could be academic, some analysts said, if Mo-bil, Texaco or, possibly, some other oil company made a bid. Analysis said that they thought Mobil might be the first to make its move, and that if Mobil did, Texaco most likely would enter the fray. Both are thought to have scant chance of passing muster with the Justice Department be-cause of their size, a consideration that may have delayed their entry until now Sources friendly to Seagram said it was their understanding that the liquor company had "not given up" and might increase its $85 of-fer or, possibly, raise the oumber of shares it would purchase immediately. This would happen, they said, only if it seemed that Du Pont was going to get antitrust clearance. In that case, Seagram could bring in a partner so that the two could jointly raise the stakes still higher.

Wholesale banking for the Euromarkets

> DGZ International in Luxembourg continued complementing the activities of the parent bank the prudent policy of previous years again during 1980/81 to consolidate its position as one of the leading wholesale banks in the Euromarket.

Total assets remained constant at DM 4.3 billion or Lfrs. 74,214 million.

The Bank's team of experts concentrated its activities on money market trading and money market related credit operations. Term money business was further expanded with DM transactions dominating.

In addition to the traditional short-term credit transactions the more profitable medium-term credit business with non-banks was cultivated. The Bank's clientele encompasses mainly top industrial borrowers, international organizations and state bodies in addition to banks.

DGZ International, in its tenth year of operations, looks back on a decade of steady growth in the Euromarkets. It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Frankfurt-based Deutsche Girozentrale - Deutsche Kommunalbank -, one of Germany's major wholesale banks, the member institution on the federal level of Germany's Savings Banks Organization.

PLAYED OUT The Jean Seberg Story

By David Richards. 386 pp. $13.95. Random House, 201 E. 50th St., New York 10022.

Reviewed by Kenneth Turan

TEAN SEBERG was a wine sold before its time. Handpicked for celebrity before she was 18, she was a laughingstock by the time she was 20, washed up in American films by 31, thrice married by 34, a suicide at 40. She had, John Gielgud once remarked, learned to be a star before she became an actress, and it was an experience she never recovered from.

Seberg's story touchs so many bases of the mid-20th-century American experience that there is a temptation to see it all as a sobering lesson of the time. Surely a cautionary tale is lurking in the debris of her sad life if we could but figure out what it's supposed to caution us against. Is it early success. overweening ambition, unbending innocence, unblinking commitment, or perhaps some incendiary combination of all four?

David Richards, drama critic for The Washington Star, tries to answer these questions, tries to tell us how Seberg regressed from the Iowa inno-cent Otto Preminger picked to star in "Saint Joan" in 1956 to the decaying corpse found in the back seat of a white Renault on a quiet Paris street
23 years later. Despite a lack of cooperation from Romain Gary. Jean's second and pivotal husband who recently ended up a suicide himself, Richards has done an excellent job of research and reporting, and his book is clearly definitive. Unfortunately, as heartbreaking as her story appears in outline, one cannot read it in detail without feeling that the anthor has made much ado about not very much Throughout her life, Richards em-phasizes, Seberg's impulses were a blend of the theatrical and the idealistic. She was a woman who liked to be perceived as a flawed innocent, "the tranquil blossom on the tortured stem," in the words of a favorite Edua. St. Vincent Millay poem. She always seemed on the verge of doing great and good work, but men kept getting in the way.

First in line was director Otto Preminger who, in Seberg's own words, "used me like a Kleenex and threw me away." Next came French author Romain Gary, an older man who gave her a crash course in refinement and savoir faire but used her as both source material and ego booster. They married, had a child, and were for a time very much in love, but the picture of Seberg literally sitting at his feet and addressing him as "dear master" is not a particularly pleasant one. Finally there was Hakim Abdullah Jamal, who comes off as a combination of Malcolm X and P.T. Barnum. He used her as a meal nicket and she in turn got the opportunity to "play the role of high emotion that had eluded her on screen." It was a role that led to a series of nervous breakdowns, excessive reliance on prescription drugs, hospitalizations and a clandestine campaign against her by the FBI, which effectively ruined what was left of her physical and mental well-being.

What this melodramatic story needs and doesn't get is a quality of dispassion. Richards is like the detective in Preminger's movie "Laura," who falls in love with a portrait of a woman. Bad words about Seberg rarely appear in this book, and when they do show up, they come as more of a shock than they should.

This partisanship extends to Richards' discussion of Seberg's 37 films.

Most of them were failures of one type or another. But the idea that just maybe they, all flopped because Seberg, for all her good intentions, beauty and swell personality, was, in director Irvin Kershner's words, "a limited actress [who] lacked the technique for Hollywood" is not a thought Richards likes to entertain.

Hampered by this lack of distance, and by Richards' classic journalistic difficulty with synthesizing something new and whole out of a wealth of new and whole out of a wealth of quotable quotes, the overriding prob-lem of "Played Out" is a lack of sub-stance. F. Scott Fitzgerald once said that the problem with American lives is that they lacked final acts. Jean Seberg's life had a rouser of a last act, and not a bad first one either, but there is nothing in the center but a there is nothing in the center but a woman-child who never quite grew

Paris," owed everything to illusion. "Show business," she said, "is all illusion." But the woman behind the illusion.— behind the "sinuous idol that enslaved and incited mankind," as one critic called her --- was enslaved to her own fierce ambition and volatile emotions.

"She could be sobbing uncontrollably one moment theu 10 minutes latwith joy, said one friend. "She was the quintessence of a star," said Jimmy Daniels, but "she was one of the great poscurs. She wasn't a great dancer and she wasn't a great singer until late in life."

In a crisp, detached style, Lynn Haney chronicles the stormy life of La Baker from her days in the slums of St. Louis to her funeral in Paris at age 68. Rarely interjecting ber own opinions. Haney instead quotes those who knew and worked with Josephine.

Baker symbolized for many writers of the time the unrestrained joy of the Jazz Age. Picasso said "she is the Nefcruti of now." e.e. cummings described ber as "a vision which opened new avenues of fear" and a "terrifying nightmare which became the most beautiful star of the Parisian stage." Even a U.S. soldier is quoted as saying "Josephine Baker is the greatest woman God ever blew breath into." Haney does not neglect to present the barsh, unfavorable criticism of Josephine. While Josephine learned to brush aside cruel comments, they nevertheless took their toll. She was no stranger to pain. Born out of wedlock and into poverty, she left home at 12, had a brief marriage at 13, and a year later joined a small song-and-dance troupe touring the South. Her first taste of show business was "cruel and frightening, romantic and exciting." and she was booked. She married again in Philadelphia, but soon left-her busband, Willie Baker, whose name she kept, to audition on Broad-way. She made the road company of "Shuffle Along," and began to attract a wide following, which led to featured roles on Broadway.

An agent brought her to Paris and at 19, performing in "La Revue Nègre," she became a star. "Paris is the dense and I am the dense." she

JOSEPHINE BAKER, the "Toast of Paris," owed everything to illusexotic dance wearing the girdle of rhinestone-studded bananas that became her trademark. She hobnobbed with the high and mighty, acquired and discarded one lover after the other and was constantly in motion. She opened her own nightclub, Chez Josephine, made a film and toured the

When the war came to Paris, she joined the Resistance and ended un entertaining troops in North Africa. The French government later awarded her the Medal of the Resistance for "the great services you have given in the most difficult moments," as De Gaulle wrote in a letter to her.

After the war, she married a fourth time, and began working on her dream of making her estate. Les Milandes, a village of the world. She wanted to gather "children of different races, religions and nationalities. raising them together to show that mutual understanding between different peoples was not a utopian fanta-sy." She adopted 13 children, but because of heavy debts was forced to leave Les Milandes. Princess Grace of Monaco provided refuge: for Josephine and her brood, and it is in-Monaco, a gambler's paradise, that Josephine's body lies.

While Josephine wrote four autohiographies and other books have touched on her life, "Naked at the Feast" provides a succinct, breezy account of what was behind the illusion.

THE bidding on the diagramed deal, suggests West has about 13 points with long clubs, and East about 6 points with long hearts. South's best play is to win the opening lead with the acc, with the king as an entry to dummy. Even without a diamond finesse, 12 tricks can be made. South can take the top diamond winners, discarding his heart loser, and then rulf a diamond, bringing down the queen. The ace and another trump settle matters.

In practice, South won with the club king intending to ruff at least one club. She followed by discarding her heart loser on diamonds and ruffed a diamond, then ruffed a club and was overruffed. The contract should have been made exactly, for South had a loser in each black suit. But East played his last diamond, hoping to promote a trump trick for partner. South played loser-on-loser.

NEW YORK — Management negotiators offered a new proposal attempting to end the 35-day-old major league baseball strike Thursday but tied to it a demand that players surrender service time for the period of the strike.

The proposal was rejected by Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association. He said to an early-afternoon negotiating session that the players would not surrender on the issue of credited service time.

Ray Grebey, director of the owners' Player Relations Committee, called the management pro-posal the culmination of a long series of compromise efforts to settle the strike."

Reductions

As part of the newest plan, which followed a visit to the talks Wednesday by Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan, the owners reduced to eight the maximum number of free agents for whom professional player compensation would be required in 1981 and increased

By eliminating the 35 days of the strike as credited service time, it would change the status of a number of players who would complete their six-year term in 1981 and prevent them from filing for free agency to November.

Throughout the strike, the players' association has insisted that service time not be affected by the walkout, which has canceled 406 major league games — more than 19 percent of the season — and postponed the All-Star Game. Management offered to submit the issue to binding arhitration but the union rejected that proposal.

"Why they attached service time to this proposal at this point... obviously this was a red flag to the players," said Miller. "The basic agreement says you get credited service every day you're on an active roster, disabled list or suspended.

Even a player suspended for cause and found guilty by an arbi-trator gets service credit. They [the owners] know that. There's no industry where you subtract service Miller said he had additional problems with the new proposal beyond the service-time issue. "By no means is the proposal acceptable," he said, "It clearly has direct compensation within the format they have been pounding at for 18 months." Earlier, Grebey dismissed a published report that he might be replaced as the owners' chief negoti-management sources as saying more of the owners' burden of negotiating has been placed in the hands of American League President dent MacPhail. Grebey has been the owners' chief negotiator throughout the 19-month talks. Earlier, there had been an optimistic air in the negotiations after a visit from the U.S. secretary of labor, who gave the talks a shove.

"I think the country should be encouraged," Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan said Wednes day. "I've asked them to get back to serious bargaining. They have done that, and I'm pleased." He added, "There is some room for optimism" about the chances of ending the first mid-season strike in baseball history.

But be indicated that if there is no reasonably quick movement in the talks between the players and owners, they could move to Washington for closer scrutiny by gov-ernment labor officials. "It is a possibility," he said. Despite the outward hopes of Donovan and federal mediator

Ken Moffett, at least one negative voice was heard to the crowd. Peter Rose, associate counsel to the players' association, sbonk his head when Donovan's name was brought up.

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- The recent photograph leaped out of the sports pages of The Toronto Globe and Mail: one woman trying to kick another, being separated by a third woman. The scene was not a mudwrestling pit to some California discotheque, but a soccer tourna-ment for children in the peaceable Canadian province of Ontario.

The fight was clearly an aberration in the midst of a joyous endof-school tournament for 4,000 children from 10 nations, but it did serve as a reminder of what can happen when adults become involved in the play of their children.

After Burlington's victory, two mothers, Cathy Delaney of Buriington and Judy Gershoff of East Brunswick, had their confronta-tion on the field.

"I went out to get one of our boys," Gershoff said. "This wonan came running over, shouting obscenities. I backed off. She kicked me and scratched me and my watch fell off."

Said Delaney: "At the end the game, a teen-ager on their side was whacking my son on the side of the face. I went out there and this woman threw a punch at me and I kicked at her and we both

According to John Healy, an official of the Robbie Tournament, "a member of Burlington's management" has apologized to East Brunswick, and "no further action is contemplated." But the publicity has been unpleasant for the parents from Burlington, a town of 100,000 about 30 miles west of Toronto.

"People are asking us, 'Are you a bunch of animals?" Delancy says. "We've played teams from all over and never had a problem."

Gershoff, concerned that too much has been made of the flareup, says: "It was just 30 seconds out of a beautiful tournament. The next night our boys lost, but it was a beautiful game. Parents were applauding kids from both teams. Over all, it was a beautiful experi-

The 'Greatest Match?'

NEW YORK - For boxing buffs, there are not all that many shopping days before Christmas. The key date is Sept. 16, when Sugar Ray Leonard engages Thomas Hearns to a rumble at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas. The proprietors of the world's two welterweight championships are expected to set-tle their conflicting claims in the parking lot where the sorriest match of recent years — Larry Holmes vs. the busk of Muhammad Ali - set a record of $6 million for gate receipts last fall. In the considered judgment of an established authority named Sugar Ray Leonard, this will be the greatest boxing match to history." To meet those specificabered as long as Cain vs. Abel. But the match does qualify as one of three that followers of The Fancy wish most ardently to see. The others are Gerry Cooney vs. Larry Holmes for one heavyweight title and Cooney vs. Mike Weaver for the other. (Thanks to the omniscience of the World Boxing As-

He told Ray: "All it's going to take is one shot. One shot and you wake up to the hospital. One shot is all." That's prohably as accurate as Leonard's forecast hut not more iant who favors Leonard. Others argue that Ray has met sterner tests than Hearns ever encountered and that his multiple gifts equip him to handle anything Hearns can offer.

As of now, the long-range guess here is that Hearns will win, and by a knockout. There are sound observers who disagree, including Angelo Dundee, who works to Leonard's corner.

Of Shengsak

Maybe so. There are, it is true, more names like Shengsak Muangsurin on Hearns' record than on Leonard's. Probably the best oppopent Hearns has fought is Pipino Cuevas, whom Thomas separated from his senses and his halfchampionship with swift dispatch. And there are critics who feel that Cuevas never was a boxer of dis-

But that performance was genuinely impressive, and Hearns wasted only a little time getting rid of Pablo Baez to his most recent bout. On both occasions Hearns took charge with a persistent and accurate jah and finished the joh with smashing right hands. Perhaps Leonard can overcome the taller man's advantage in reach, get inside and "bury Hearns underneath," but no adversary has yet accomplished that.

Meanwhile, ringside seats will be selling for as much as $500. Chances are they will sell out, for this is Vegas, where money gets no respect. Many customers to Vegas pay only iodirectly for their tickcis, anyway: They receive them as gifts from the hotel-casino where they stay, returning the purchase price, with interest, at the craps

Weaver, Tillis Fight Oct. 3d in Chicago

The Associated Press CHICAGO - Mike Weaver will defend his World Boxing Association beavyweight title against James Tillis here Oct. 3d. The bout had been sebeduled for Feb. 28 hut was postponed when Weaver injured a hand during training.

Weaver has a 23-9 career record with 16 knockouts. He won the crown March 31, 1980, when he knocked out titleholder John Tate with 45 seconds left in the 15th round. His latest defense was Oct. 25, 1980, when he knocked out South African Gerry Coetzee. Tillis is 20-0 with 16 knockouts; be is ranked second by the WBA, eighth by the World Boxing Council and ninth by Ring magazine.

Reagan's 'Red-Hots'

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — Having whipped the Democrats without hreaking into a sweat; President Reagan must now look forward to coping with his friends. Lyndon Johnson had this problem back in the era when he ran the Senate for the Democrats. He could usually glue together enough Republican swing votes and enough Democratic regulars to have his way, but his bleakest moments were invariably provided by the liberals of his own party. "The red-hots." Johnson called them.

Baker

They were "red hot" for ideas that made Republicans and dampcool Democrats climb the wall. bellow and snort. They filled Johnson with sorrow and despair. His friends, whose roots, like his, went back to the early New Deal - how could they make life so miserable for him? Didn't they understand?

President Reagan also has some "red-hots" in the wings. In the political gibberish of the day, they are often called "the extreme right." This is the group that has carried the Stockman budget for

They came to power oo a national surge of desire for lower taxes, cheaper government and devil-take-the-hindmost — a desire so powerful that it pulled several mil-lioo critical middle-of-the-highway voters over into Reagan conserva-

Barring an economic disaster, the president can probably prosper by holding this middle-road part of his coalition. The danger is that the "red-hots" will drive it out of camp by demanding that Resgan carry through with a remaking of American society that brings the government thundering into pri-

The symbol of the "red-hots" has become the Rev. Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority, but they go beyond that. They are the people who want government to end the hedonism built into U.S. life over the past generation. Their prime aim is to shnt down the sexual carnival and make government

AMERICA CALLING

There is a certain appeal in this aim even to the hardened sinner, hut there remains the reality of millions of voters who are likely to howl if government starts reorganizing their private lives.

The early attacks against abortions for low-income women and free exercise of homosexual rights have given only a hint of the political mischief to be stirred up.

Middle-class and middle-income, if the 1980 census is anywhere near accurate, no longer mean a husband and wife living with 2.5 children in a split level with the parlor over a two-car garage. It is just as apt to mean two or three single people banded to-gether to pay otherwise insupportable housing costs. Or a man and woman, both previously divorced, now married to each other, both of them possibly working. There are his children, her children and their children, and sometimes the children live with him and her, and sometimes some of them live with his former wife and some with her former husband.

These people are probably just as avid about tax cuts and chivying the pauper classes as the old-fashioned two-and-a-half-child family with mom and dad married 20 years, and there is oo reason why Reagan cannot hold them in his coalition.

On the other hand, if he is forced to bring in the government and cut off abortions for them, and sanitize their television, and improve their moral tone, rage could be quick to howl.

The White House apparently recognizes the danger. Astutely, it persuaded the "red-hots" not to press their demands until the president had enacted his economic program. Now their turn is about to come.

By oow everyone must know it is suicidal to underrate the political skill of the Reagan group. Doubtless the White House will find a way to cool down its hottest menos when due puis are presented. It may cost the president a bit in friendship, as it cost Lyndon Johnson in his day, but the great question is how to maintain power. And as Johnson used to say, Where else are they going to go? An Architectural Student, a Competition

For a Memorial and a Few Ironies

By B. Drummond Ayres Jr. New York Times Service

ASHINGTON - "I don't even know how to draft yet," Maya Ying Lin said with n laugh, enjoying one of the many ironies of her first-place finish in the national competition to design a memorial to veterans of the Vietnam War.

She held up the winning entry. It was a soft pastel, a landscape of subtle greens, with a simple. hlack V-shaped wall tucked gen-Ily into the side of a slight rise.

Lin, who is of Chinese parentage, had come up with what seemed more a work of modern art than a concept for a $7-million monument on the mall near the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument obelisk.

Nevertheless, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund found hers the best of the 1,421 contest entries, and awarded her the $20,000 prize. She came to Washington, found an apartment in Georgetown, and is now working on the final design.

When the contest officials made their decision, they did oot know that Lin was not a trained architect. She was a 21-year-old senior at Yale University, about to graduate with a bachelor's degree in architecture but with several years of graduate work and apprenticeship still ahead before she could put "architect" after ber name

The officials found, too, that the Vietnam War was not one of the big issues in her life. She was too young for that. And they learned that when she submitted her design for a classwork grade at Yale, she was awarded a B.

'A Little Sloppy'

"The classroom job was a little sloppy," she explained. Then, smiling, she added: "My professor entered the war memorial contest too."

Of course, all that was only subsequently ironic. What the sponsors of the memorial competition were looking for was a design to honor the 57,692 dead of the Vietnam War without making a political or military statement about the war's controversial nature. They rejected concepts that were heroic, concepts that were partisan, even one that was, basically, a helicopter pad. Then, strolling about the government aircraft hangar in which the designs were displayed, they came upon Lin's pastel and were cap-

"It is uniquely horizontal, entering the earth rather than pieroing the sky," the contest officials said in their statement of acceptance, alluding to the nature of many monuments in Washing-

As for the designer, she is taking it all in stride, pleased and enjoying herself, but far from overcome by sudden fame. "I liked my idea," she said, self-assured despite her youth and inexperience. "That's why I entered the contest'

Lin did not go to college with an architecture career in mind. "I didn't really know what I wanted to be," she said. "I just knew I wanted to be in some profession, since I'd grown up as a faculty She was born in Athens, Ohio, where her father and mother are professors at Ohio University. Her father, Henry Huan Lin, is dean of fine arts and her mother; Julia Chang Lin, teaches English and Oriental literature. Both left China shortly after World War II, she to attend Smith College on a scholarship, he to escape possible imprisonment by the Communiste ommunists.

Since she was unsure about choosing a career when she arrived at Yale, Lin initially signed up for a wide array of courses, including several in photography. So how did she come to settle upon architecture as a major?

"One day," she recalled, "I was just staring up at the ceiling, at all the lines and painting on it and the like, and, suddenly, I decided I was going to be an architect. Just like that."

She plans to spend her $20,000 in prize money to continue her studies at Yale after working on the memorial plan.

Maya Ying Lin's "miquely horizontal" design, near obelisk.

While in Europe several sum-mers ago, Lin found herself fascinated by the elaborate monuments and memorials in many city cemeteries. Then, last year someone suggested to the architecture department at Yale that her class take a seminar in funerary architecture.

While the class was still study-ing, word arrived that Congress had authorized use of a two-acre site a few hundred yards north-east of the Lincoln Memorial for a Vietnam War memorial. It was to be built with public donations. The design would be chosen in a national competition, much as designs were chosen for the U.S. Capitol and the Washington Monument

At the urging of Prof. Andy Burr, Lin and her classmates decided to enter the competition. In the end, however, only she and Burr actually submitted entries. In the memorial, the visitor will be confronted, left and right, by polished black walls of granite, each 200 feet long. On the walls, in chronological order, will be the names of the 57,692 Americans who died in Vietnam.

The memorial is scheduled to be dedicated on Veterans Day (Nov. 11), 1982, assuming the money can be raised in time.

Max Lerner denies it, sort of:

from holding public office.

Elizabeth Taylor has "no comment whatsoever." A new book claims that the columnist and the actress had a two-year love affair 20 years ago, while both were married to other people. According to "Flizabeth Taylor: The Last Star," by Kitty Kelley, the affair was serious but Lerner called it off because he felt that "she would use me the way a beautiful woman uses an older man - as a front while she goes to bed with everything in sight." Excerpts of the book, to be published this fall by Simon & Schuster, appear in the Ladies' Home Journal. Lerner claims Kelley "ran away with the facts." More he would not say, explaining that he plans to write about the dispute himself. A spokesman for Taylor, who is oow married to U.S. Sen. John W. Warner of Virginia, said the actress would not respond to the allegation. . . If Jane Seymour hasn't had an affair with Warren Beatty, she sure won't have one now. "He did call me after we met at a party," the British actress says in Oui magazine, commenting oo reports of a liaison between her and the American actor. "He used to phone me at 3 a.m. But then, he calls a lot of women at 3 a.m. He doesn't know whom he's talking to half the time."

"The next time I open my big mouth — that'll be the day," Balti-more Mayor William Donald Schaefer said on the occasion of his plunge into the seal pool at the city's newly completed National Aquarium. Schaefer vowed in Janmany to take the dip if the $21.3-million aquarium was not open by July 4. Problems have delayed the opening which is now set for Aug. 8. About 300 people watched the mayor share his 10-minute dip with two aquarium officials, a blonde actress dressed as a mer-striped bathing suit and carried a plastic duck. Shere Hite's "The Hite Report on Male Sexuality" has yet another challenge — from McCall's magazine. Hite says in the muchdisputed book that 66 percent of the men who responded to her questionnaire said they had had extramarital affairs. McCall's says it went to its readers' "husbands or male partners" and, of the 1,047 men who responded only 16 percent said they had been unfaithful McCall's says 14 percent of the men admitted that they had "come close" to being unfaithful, but 68 percent claimed they never cheated on their mates or even thought about it.

Robert Stack's father died when he was young and his mother feared that he would "grow up to be a pantywaist." So she pu her son into macho things like shooting said the actor, who was in Salem, Ore., to check out the 1981 international shooting championships. "I grew up shooting around people like Clark Gable, Howard Hughes, Bob Taylor. They all became like proxy fathers to me. I had kind of a nifty childhood,"-said the American actor, whose new series. "Strike Force," is scheduled to make its debut on ABC-TV this fail. He blamed the killing of President John F. Kennedy for making the sport of shooting "a dirty word. That was ridiculous. Shooting has not changed. the game has not changed. Atti-tudes changed."

Starting next week, 38-year-old-John F. Lehman Jr. will put in two weeks of naval reserve duty. It's only fitting: Lehman is the U.S. secretary of the Navy. He's also a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve; he went on "non-pay" reserve status when he became the Navy's top civilian earlier this year. A cording to a Navy an nouncement, he will serve his stint at the Naval Air Station at Oceania, Va., near Norfolk. The Navy says it will be his 15th annual active-training tour since he received his reserve commission in
